Take action to stop the RN cuts in our community

Quinte Health Care slashes RNs:

Registered Nurses (RNs) have special skills that are crucial for patients with complex needs. Yet Quinte Health Care is cutting 45 RNs. That's a loss of nearly 80,000 hours of care for our community every year.

It's already hard enough to get the care we need. Cutting RNs will only make things worse and put patients at risk. Fewer RNs results in more complications including bedsores, sepsis, blood clots, pneumonia, cardiac arrest and even death.

We shouldn't be balancing the books at the expense of our patients.
